

“Your body turns many foods into a special sugar called blood sugar,” explained Miss Starry. “Blood sugar gives energy to your cells, the very smallest parts of your body. Everything in your body is made up of tiny cells that need sugar to work.”